

MHA Women's History Month

2019

Norma Baker-Flying Horse

Norma Baker-Flying Horse, an enrolled member of the MHA Nation. A member of the Hidatsa, Dakota Sioux and Assiniboine Tribes, Norma is the owner of the Native American Fashion line, Red Berry Woman. Norma's work has been seen throughout Indian Country being worn by Tribal members whom represent their Native nation from politics to pageants to the film industries. Norma's work has been featured on international runways such as Vancouver Fashion Week. She also had a gown worn on the 2018 Oscar stage by activist, Alice Brownotter during the Andra Day and Common performance. This event earned Norma the title of First Contemporary Native American Fashion Designer to have a gown won on the Oscar televised event. She also had a gown worn by PowWows.com reporter, Corinne Ostreich on the red carpet at the 2019 Grammys. She was the only Native American designer showcasing her fashion line for the opening week of the 2019 Paris Fashion week for the Fashion Week Studio. Norma resides with her family on the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation where she also serves as a Government Affairs Staffer for Councilwoman V. Judy Brugh of the Four Bears Segment.